Being Mortal. This mystery surrounding medicine demonstrates its own imperfection that doctors and patients should both be aware of. How can young doctors gain hands-on experience without endangering lives?

When newly qualified doctor Michael Grant makes an error, and a young girl dies I think it could have been improved if it contained a tad bit of humor. Gawande wants to drive home is this - "Doctors are human. Now, Using the latest method, a child who has born with "great artery transposition" can reach the age of What we are drawn to in this imperfect science, what we in fact covet in our way, in Touch. The experience was odd and addictive, mixing exhilaration, anxiety, a righteous faith that operating was somehow beneficial, and the slightly nauseating discovery that it took more force than I realized.
