I can learn how to code in virtually any available language without having to go to school. I think there is plenty of evidence that it is and I think most reasonable people would agree. The biggest variable, then, is the climate in which teens navigate this stage of development.

This is the ultimate all-in-one survival guide for today's high-schoolers. Some parents and their kids might benefit from it. Excellent comment! No one can truly know the answer to this universal question.

I miss them sometimes, but I have my life and they have theirs, and I respect. No morning I set the alarm on my phone for minutes earlier than I did the day. A counselor on the Expert Panel describes the toll that this increased pressure takes on some students: There really is an intense pressure to achieve, that is, in some ways, counter-productive.
